

A lot of people will try to handle their own cases with the insurance company and usually it'll be about three months before they end up coming through our doors because the insurance company's either refusing to negotiate the case, or is not making a reasonable settlement offer. Sometimes people can successfully do it, but rarely will they actually achieve the same results as they would if they had an attorney.

The insurance companies very rarely will take people without attorneys very seriously. If the person is just looking for payment of their medical bills and nothing else, and no other compensation, that might be something they can obtain on their own but if they want proper, full and fair compensation for their injuries they are going to usually need an attorney.
